William O. Diab is a Partner on the firm's Dispute Resolution Team and Construction Law practice. William prides himself on being a strategic problem solver of complex commercial and construction disputes. For clients who want their day in court, William has tried bench and jury trials to successful verdicts as lead counsel. He has experience representing publicly traded and closely held companies, entrepreneurs, and investors, as well as Court appointed fiduciaries in matters concerning distressed transactions and corporate malfeasance. He also routinely represents real estate developers in multi-party construction defect and delay cases, as well as discrete construction frauds. William has appeared in a variety of forums including state and federal courts, bankruptcies, and arbitrations in national and multi-jurisdictional disputes.

Outside of court, William advises real estate developers on structuring their construction and development plans. He marshals a thoughtful understanding of the risks and variables that compose a construction project and the roles of each essential player to negotiate the matrix of contractual relationships between the developer, contractor, architect, engineers, subcontractors, sureties, insurers, and governmental agencies. William is routinely asked to serve as an advisor and consultant during construction to guide his clients through on-site disputes and emergencies with the objective of keeping projects on track, reducing the likelihood of litigation, and closing out the projects smoothly.
