"Well over a year ago, we would be talking to our clients and contacts, and they weren't expressing much enthusiasm about infrastructure funding," says Dawn M. Meyers, a partner based in the Ft. Lauderdale offices of the law firm of Berger Singerman. "We were a little confused as to why." She and her colleagues determined to find out, and in March commissioned a survey of 1,700 development, construction, and planning business owners, seeking insight into their perception of the federal Infrastructure Investment and Jobs Act, which was signed into law in November 2021.
