Bankruptcy lawyer Paul Singerman of Berger Singerman worries about the staying power of vendors and other companies that support the hospitality, cruise line and aviation industries.

"These are going to be the front line of casualties," he said. "As you know, it's small business that employs the majority of employees in this country."

He recalled the financial damage suffered by raw material suppliers and skilled workers in the construction industry after the housing collapse of 2007. "The ripple effect in the cruise, hospitality and aviation are bigger and that concerns me," Singerman said.
